

the document, and in it he alleges that the doctor has been guilty of the crime charged with Mrs. Annie Cole, his wife, who is now an "angel" in the doctor's "heaven" at Washington Heights. "Koresh" was arrested while sprinting to catch a Rock Island train. The warrant for Teed's arrest was sworn out before Justice Everett early in the morning and at 10 o'clock the constable and attorney started on their journey to Washington Heights to serve it. They were so confident of success that Attorney Hill bought three return tickets. He still has the third one, for "Koresh" injudiciously flashed a dollar when the conductor came around and so had to pay his own fare. The seekers after "Koresh" did not try to break into "heaven" and effect a capture. They waited patiently till Teed issued therefrom. He started on a trot for the depot, for the train he wished to board was in sight, and he was due at the Normal Park branch "heaven" by noon.

"Doctor, Doctor!" called Attorney Hill as he broke into a run. "Wait a minute."

The doctor simply turned his head and then moved forward with increased speed. But Attorney Hill has longer legs and better wind, and he was soon by Teed's side.

"Can't wait," explained the doctor, "I've got to go to town."

"Well, we're going to town, too," pleasantly replied the attorney, "and I guess we'll all go on the same train."

Constable Eicke joined the procession at this moment, and, laying a large and well-developed hand on Teed's shoulder, said:

"Dr. Teed, I arrest you in the name of the law."

"For what?"

"Unlawful intimacy with a married woman."

"Who says so?"

"It is on complaint of Thomas Cole, her husband."

Just at this interesting point, when Dr. Teed's blanched face showed how unpleasant the situation was, Mrs. Ordway, one of the "angels," rushed up. She got on the train with the doctor, but alighted at Normal Park to inform the faithful of the gross indignity heaped upon the head of their "Messiah."

During the trip Teed communed solely with himself, only making the request that he be allowed to go to the office of Attorney C. W. Greenfield in the Unity Building. This done, the party went to Justice Everett's court, No. 125 South Clark street. Teed was formally arraigned. Attorney Hill asked that the bond be placed at $5,000. Attorney Greenfield thought $1,000 high enough.

"I do not think a $1,000 bond will hold this man here," said Attorney Hill. "The punishment for the crime charged is a year in jail and $500 fine, and rather than run the chance of conviction I believe he would forfeit the bond and skip the town."

The bond was fixed at $2,500, and Teed, in company with the constable, started out to hunt bail. At 9 p. m. Teed called at Justice Everett's home on Prairie avenue in company with W. B. Cowing, who signed the bond and scheduled property valued at $17,500. The case was set for a hearing at 1 p. m. May 28 at Justice Everett's court, No. 125 South Clark street.

"MESSIAH" TEED IS ARRESTED.

The Charge Against Him Is Intimacy with the Wife of Thomas Cole.

"Koresh" fell into the hands of the law yesterday, or rather into the arms of Constable H. E. R. Eicke, who represented the law and had in his inside pocket at the time a warrant charging Dr. Teed with intimacy with another man's wife. Thomas Cole swore out
